this book was first published in 1966 it was surprising that so small and so remote a country as switzerland should have played such an important part in the industrial revolution on the continent in the nineteenth century a lack of natural resources and basic raw materials and population of 1 687 000 in 1817 faraway trade ports and until 1848 no real central government with the administrative structure to support expansion of manufacturers however the people were hardworking thrifty and high standards of workmanship and had good relations with france and germany which saw the watchmakers silkweavers and chocolate crafters start to thrive johann conrad fischer was typical of the entrepreneurs who laid the foundations of switzerland's prosperity with his steelworks

the laboratory of progress switzerland in the 19th century tells the improbable story of how a small backward mountainous agricultural country with almost no raw materials became an industrial powerhouse a hub of innovation a touristic mecca and a pioneer in transportation all in the course of a single century that a tiny landlocked country should become a dominant steamship builder for the rest of the world that a country that had never seen a cotton plant should become the world's second largest textile producer that a country with hardly any level terrain should come to boast the world's most highly developed railway network and that a country whose main export was impoverished emigrants should be transformed into one of the world's major financial centres these astonishing developments among many others are explored and explained both through the specific stories of individual innovators and through a prescient analysis of the political economic societal and cultural structures that formed the context in which switzerland's astonishing transformation took place the book is a compelling read both for professional historians and for general readers with an interest in switzerland it highlights the roles of transport networks and individual pioneers in industrial and political development
